POWERS OF THE PRESIDENT. What are the constitutional powers of the President with respect to sending troops to China and providing ways and means for that purpose. * The constitution vests in Congress the power "to declare war" and "to raise and support armies." The effect of this is to withhold the power from the President. Without the express sanction of Congress he has no authority to declare or make war, to send the army or mavy on a hostile expedition or to spend public money for that purpose. He may, how ever, employ naval or military forces for the protection of American life and property wherever they may be in peril-He may send to any foreign country such defray the expense out of the public treasury. This right has never been questioned and has often been exercised. * In this Chinese affair Mr. McKinley and his Cabinet are proceeding on the theory that the troops are employed and the expenses menried for the protection of American life and property. Only on that theory can the action find constitu mon Congress be justified. If the Prest dent has not gone beyond his prerogative unprecedented in our lustory. An actury twenty thousand strong is to be sent it China to co-operate with the allied force of Europe and Japan. This will call for the expenditure of an enormous sum. Though war has not been declared it is m reality being waged, and the protec tion of life and property has become subordinate consideration to putting down the Chinese rebellion, if not subduing the Chinese nation. Our indibary operations are planned on a scale hardly less than those in the Philippines, which are prosecuted as an outcome of the Spanish war authorized by Congress,

Such is the situation to-day. What if will be to-morrow no one can tell. But there is every probability that it will that the present fiction of no war will be dispelled by the stern reality of war. If Congress will become imperative to determine what course the I'nited States shall take, for then the President will clearly have no constitutional warrant or ignored mustakes and departures of Mr. for any aggressive action without the co operation of the legislative branch of the who think that the situation is already one to be dealt with by Congress rather are serious objections to summoning that body except in case of argent incressity, New York Herald, July 20.
